Chapter I.

INTRODUCTION Embracing the Future

The Greek philosopher Heraclitus once wrote that nothing is certain except change. In the last two decades we have been forced to acknowledge this ancient truth, for many of our time-honoured and reliable religious, economic and social structures and definitions of reality have undergone major upheavals. Because human beings instinctively fear change, we imagine enormous disasters such as the effects of global warming or the great tsunami of December 2004; or we fix our hopes on global redemption, or profound changes in the nature of society which could somehow miraculously restore peace and our faith in our fellow human beings. Is this new century really a special time, spiritually and materially? Is there really a New Age waiting in the wings? Or is this a construct, a way of alleviating our omnipresent anxiety while the world keeps changing faster than we ourselves seem to be able to do?

Astrological cycles do not take account of human calendars, and the movements of the planets have their own logic and timing. If we were to take any six-year period in history, we might find any number of possible planetary configurations which give a particular flavour and meaning to that time. But the fact that we place such importance on our recent entry into the 21st century means that we will perceive the flavour and meaning of this time through specially orientated vision. We expect a great deal from the next decades, for either good or ill; and therefore, from a psychological perspective, we are particularly attuned to the currents of the time and perhaps able to respond more acutely, with greater hopes and increased creativity. In a sense it does not matter whether our division of time into centuries and millennia is artificial. The human psyche makes it significant, and that is what counts.

What is the special flavour of this time? What can astrology tell us as we move further into the 21st century? Astrologers often refer to the incoming Age of Aquarius, but what does it really mean?

The advent of the Aquarian Age

The changing of the ages is governed by the movement of the spring equinoctial point (the first degree of the zodiac) into a new constellation. This happens roughly every two thousand years. It is presently shifting from the constellation of Pisces to the constellation of Aquarius. At the dawn of the Christian era it shifted from Aries to Pisces. Such huge cosmic movements are reflected in human affairs first and foremost through the ways in which we perceive God, and the world-view which we deem to be "true". If we look back through history, it is obvious that at the dawn of the Age of Pisces the perception of reality shifted in a radical way, reflected in the birth of new religions (both Christianity and Islam) and a profoundly different vision of life's essential meaning and purpose. Vast changes such as these do not occur on Thursday at 3.00 PM, but stretch over a period of a couple of centuries, and the transition time is often one of chaos during which old values and old gods begin to lose their value and meaning, and new ways are sought by an increasingly anxious and disorientated human family.

LONG-TERM HOROSCOPE by LIZ GREENE
for Prince William

What, then, might this shift from Pisces into Aquarius mean for us all? Aquarius is a sign belonging to the astrological element of air, and this signifies that mind, rather than heart, is likely to begin to assume the highest value. Human ingenuity and human inventiveness, reflected in technology and a greater understanding of how the cosmos works, are important dimensions of the Aquarian ethos. Human brotherhood is also immensely important. The values which propel nations into recognising not only each other's rights but also each other's similarities is likely to be reflected in an increasing sense of globalism, of being "citizens of the world". Aquarius is also the sign of the mass, and this means a levelling of extremes and a seeking of common denominators in education, money, fashion, the arts, and all other spheres in which human creativity and effort can make their mark. Is this then a "good" or "bad" age? That depends on what we make of it. Each of us, as we move further into the 21st century, has the individual challenge of responding to and working with the new energy which is presently causing such profound changes in science, religion, communications, and social and political structures.

Chapter II

The planetary configurations

Each of us has an individual horoscope which will be affected by the shifting planetary pictures made by the slow-moving planets. These planetary configurations, although not directly linked with the changing of the astrological ages, need nevertheless to be seen as markers of important shifts and changes in the collective psyche, visible more on a social than an individual level. The three outer planets - Uranus, Neptune, and Pluto - reflect changes in our attitudes toward progress, spiritual aspiration and survival. Their configurations occur whether or not a "New Age" is incipient, but when important configurations occur during a time when we are so psychologically primed with expectations - both of disasters and miracles - our responses take on a special flavour. What does this mean for us all? After the Second World War, a new spirit was abroad, fuelled in part by the darkness and suffering with which so many people were afflicted, but fuelled also by a fiery spirit of hope and innovation, and an airy dream of harmony and peace in the world. There is a similar spirit abroad now. These three outer planets, all concerned with collective movements and trends, seem to be offering us a vision of a reformed and brighter world.

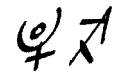

This does not mean that we will all sail into the future full of joy and free of problems. In many areas of the world there is a great deal of suffering and terrifying uncertainty, and individuals may still have to cope with challenges which may prove painful and frustrating. Also, the kind of vision which is presently infecting so many people is not necessarily congenial to everyone. Idealism and vision may also be accompanied by a lack of recognition of individual rights and feelings, and collective aspirations toward progress, while strong on rhetoric, may occasionally lack an appreciation of time and human frailty. Some people may feel pressured and overloaded by the qualities of the time, as though they are expected to learn everything all at once and give up hard-won values and security because the collective demands it. To understand and get the best from the upcoming configurations of the outer planets coinciding with the changing of the ages, we need first to understand ourselves, and how these planets will affect us individually.

Pluto in Sagittarius

Pluto is the great bass drumbeat of the planetary pantheon, taking a leisurely 249 years to travel around the zodiac. It entered the sign of Sagittarius in 1995 and leaves it to enter Capricorn in 2008. Thus the first decade of the 21st century is dominated by this important movement of Pluto through the sign of Sagittarius the Centaur, concerned with religious, spiritual, philosophical and moral questions. Pluto symbolises those deep underground forces in the collective psyche which break down and renew that which is old, outworn and past its time. It works like a machine dredging the bottom of a pond, bringing to the surface everything which is rotten and ready for the compost heap, so that new life can emerge cleaner, brighter and stronger than before. While it moved through Scorpio in the second half of the 1980's and the first half of the 1990's, we experienced a darkening of our vision of life. Now we have reached a point where we are seeking a new vision of God, a new way of defining right and wrong, and new ways in which to understand and communicate with each other. On the global level, we may expect many conflicts and transformations in the sphere of orthodox religion, with a heady mixture of sectarianism and impassioned truth-seeking, fanaticism and a greater tolerance of the many ways through which we may approach the divine. We may also expect new attitudes toward law and the legal systems in every nation, as well as changes in our attitudes toward knowledge and education. And in the sphere of communication the internet has already made its mark.

The profound moral and spiritual dilemmas which Pluto raises as it travels through Sagittarius may be seen on many levels in the outer world. They may also challenge you in very personal ways, and you may not initially realise that the issues you are confronting are not only your own, but also shared by many people struggling in their own individual ways to redefine what they understand as truth. Even if Pluto's movement affects very personal spheres of your life, it may be worth ultimately asking the question, "What is the deeper meaning of what I am going through? What am I meant to be learning? How can I use this time to redefine what I believe to be right and wrong, truth and falsehood?

And what is the nature of the God in which I believe?"

Pluto in Capricorn

Pluto entered the sign of Capricorn in 2008 and will not enter Aquarius until 2023. Thus the second decade of the 21st century is dominated by this important movement of Pluto through the sign of Capricorn the Goat, concerned with structures, hierarchies, authority and the nature of government. While it moved through Sagittarius we experienced an impassioned focus on our definitions of God and morality. Now we have reached a point where we are seeking changes in the authoritative structures which establish coherence and law in our world. On the global level, we may expect many changes - some consenting and some through struggle - in the sphere of politics, finance, and the laws by which we are governed. Abuses of power which were once taken for granted are now likely to be challenged, and so too are the ways in which we elect our leaders and assign them authority over us. National boundaries and collective political entities may shift radically as idealism is replaced by a more realistic assessment of what human beings need. We may also expect new attitudes toward the environment, and new laws through which we can conserve and protect it - including the animal life of the planet, so long relegated to the bottom of the hierarchy.

The profound dilemmas around personal and collective responsibility which Pluto raises as it travels through Capricorn may be seen on many levels in the outer world. They may also challenge you in very personal ways, and you may not initially realise that the issues you are confronting are not only your own, but also shared by many people struggling in their own individual ways to redefine what they understand as authority. Even if Pluto's movement affects very personal spheres of your life, it may be worth ultimately asking the question, "What is the deeper meaning of what I am going through? What am I meant to be learning? How can I use this time to redefine my responsibilities to myself, my community and my country? And how truly self-sufficient am I, in a world which requires me to find new ways of standing on my own feet, firmly on my own ground?"

A search for identity

As Pluto moves slowly from Sagittarius into Capricorn, the main sphere in which you are likely to experience its subtle transformative effects is the area of your sense of personal identity. However you have presented yourself in the past, you are like a butterfly just beginning to push out of the chrysalis, and major changes in your environment, recently or coming up, may require you to redefine everything you thought you stood for and believed in. You may sometimes have a sense that you are ending a chapter of your life and beginning a new one, and indeed, on an inner level this is so - and perhaps on an outer level too, in relation to certain relationships and the place where you are living. Old ties which have lost their power to bind may pass from your life, and you may also feel impelled to change your environment or make radical changes in the image you offer to the outside world. However, this long, slow, often hidden process of personal transformation may not be evident in any specific striking events. It may occur almost entirely on an inner level. You may know that you are changing, but for a long time you may not be clear what to do next. Take your time and do not try to rush or push the process. You are becoming more truly yourself, and many blocks and difficulties from the past will slowly drop away. This is worth a little patience.

It is possible that you may experience some slight feelings of depression from time to time - and perhaps without any apparent external cause. Your energy may sometimes seem withdrawn from the outer world, and you may feel as though you need an extra dose of privacy and peace and quiet in which to reflect. Don't let this alarm you; it is not depression in any negative sense, but is an introversion of energy while new potentials begin to emerge from within. If you feel you need to give more time to your inner journey, don't be afraid to do so. In fact you could really learn the value of saying "No!" and affirming your boundaries and emotional needs. Over this period you could also discover the importance of listening to your instincts rather than imposing too many "shoulds" and "oughts" on yourself. The people who truly care about you and are meant to be in your life will not go away through these changes; and such relationships will emerge stronger and deeper. But superficial friendships based on an image rather than on your true self may not withstand the test of time, and some situations may come to an end simply because they have served their purpose. You have every reason to feel serene and hopeful, even if you cannot yet see the shape of the person you are becoming. Something wiser than the conscious ego is running the show; and if you listen to your heart and your feelings, and let go of what you have outgrown, this time may well prove the most powerfully transformative of your life.

Some very deep changes are happening inside you which are likely to result in a radical change in direction and outlook. These changes are not sudden; they have been building up quietly over a long period of time, and you may not even be quite sure when they began. But you have reached the end of a phase of life, and it's time to rethink who you are, what you want, and how loyal you have been to your deepest values. The seeds for a new beginning are being sown right now which will affect your path for many years to come. Certain situations in your outer life may have reached a turning point, and some kind of ending may be possible in your work direction or in more personal spheres. While the events of your outer life may not always seem to be within your control, they are not random, and reflect the profound transformative process that is happening within. You have a chance to let go of many old blocks and inhibitions, and break free of patterns from the past that have held you back. Try to keep a detached attitude so that you can recognise when it is time to let go. This isn't a time for pride, ego defences, or power battles; something wiser than the conscious ego is at work in your life, and you need to learn to trust it. Take plenty of time for quiet reflection, and don't let others pressure you. It is especially important that you make the effort to communicate what you think and believe in. You could emerge from this important time of transition with an entirely new perspective and a great deal more energy and confidence.

A deep affirmation of your faith in life may help you to move closer to your goals, and may also induce a greater spiritual or philosophical commitment. Although no external crisis may precipitate the change which is presently occurring within you, nevertheless you are likely to benefit from a deeper sense of purpose and a feeling that you have a unique individual destiny to fulfil in life. While this may not involve any specific external decisions, it could give you greater self-confidence and trust in your abilities, as well as a greater capacity to communicate your ideas. This could lead you to take opportunities which, earlier, you might have turned your back on through an excess of self-doubt. All matters psychological and spiritual may interest you strongly at the moment, and you may also feel the need to define your beliefs and formulate your world-view in a stronger and more committed way. All these things are internal, and likely to be deep and quiet changes; but the by-products on the worldly level may be considerable if you have been held back in the past by fear or lack of trust. Although this may not be a time to gamble with resources you cannot afford to lose, it may be worthwhile to reflect on where you could expand your life within the limits of your real capabilities; for you can probably view those capabilities with much greater honesty and realism than you have done in the past.

A certain amount of emotional turbulence may come your way for a while, because deep changes are taking place in your habitual emotional responses to life. You are in process of leaving behind many old patterns which belong to your childhood and family background, and thus there is a kind of chapter ending and a new one beginning in terms of your way of relating to others and how you express your emotional needs. These changes are important, positive, and probably long overdue. One of the most important could be a new-found honesty in communicating what you really feel and want from those close to you. You can therefore look to the future with a hopeful spirit. But it is important that you are able to let go of what needs to pass from your life, especially when it comes to what you usually rely on for emotional security. That doesn't mean you will lose your security. But you may feel as if you are not certain of what you need or whether others can give it to you, and sometimes it may appear as if powerful emotions which you are not very familiar with are interfering with your usual way of responding. Try to avoid emotional power battles.

and loneliness and lead us into the Paradise Garden which we lost once upon a time long, long ago. What we perceive as fashionable is also reflected by Neptune's current zodiacal sign, and music, art, and interpretation of beauty all change and shift like Neptune's waters as we alter our vision of what will satisfy our eternal longing.

When Neptune moved through Aquarius in the 19th century, it was the first time the phrase "United Europe" was used in a political sense. During that earlier transit, dreams of an end to global conflict were accompanied by a heightened feeling of brotherhood and spiritual unity among men and women of every different race and nation. At the same time, a passionate spirit of nationalism swept Europe and America, putting an end to the dreams of global unity. As Neptune moves through Aquarius once again, we are once again dreaming dreams of a worldwide unity which will end all conflict. Sadly, not all of Neptune's dreams come true, and sometimes there is bitter disappointment as our heightened perceptions of what could be possible collide with the reality of the world and the limitations of human nature. For the first time in over a century and a half we are filled once again with a vision of human unity which could yield many immensely creative results. But such a vision could also make us blind to recognising our limits, and our impassioned dreams of what "ought to be" good for everyone may trample over the rights and feelings of the individual. What we see as beautiful, fashionable and desirable is also changing. As a collective we are losing our sentimentality about the past and focusing on that which is new, innovative, technologically advanced, and able to create a more efficient and interconnected society.

Neptune in Pisces

Neptune enters Pisces in 2011 and does not leave until 2025.

Neptune's movement through Pisces in the 19th century presided over the birth of the spiritualist movement in America, which quickly spread throughout Europe and awakened a new sense of alternative levels of reality and the existence of continuing life after death. Even discoveries in science were influenced by this magical passage of Neptune through its own zodiacal sign: hypnosis was discovered, and explorations began into the nature of the unconscious psyche which led to the birth of modern depth psychology and psychotherapy. At the same time, a passionate spirit of romantic nationalism swept Europe and America, putting an end to previous dreams of global unity. As Neptune enters the sign of the Great Deep, we are once again dreaming dreams of penetrating the secrets beyond the veil of material reality, and finding our redemption in romantic visions of a new society and a new world. For the first time in over a century and a half we are filled once again with a vision of the mystery and beauty of the eternal. But such a vision could also make us blind to the requirements of the earthly world, and our impassioned collective dreams of sacrifice and transcendence may require a more realistic and objective eye. What we see as beautiful, fashionable and desirable is also changing. As a collective we are losing our trust in the omniscience of science and the efficacy of social legislation, and are focusing on the mysteries of the human heart and soul.

Finding inner resources

Neptune's magic and mystery are most likely to be expressed in the sphere of your financial resources and the ways in which you earn your living. You may have a great range of experiences involving money and what constitutes security for you during this time, from surprisingly fortunate to irritatingly disappointing. In the end these experiences are likely to teach you faith in a higher source and confidence that if you trust life and develop your creative talents honestly and authentically, you will always land on your feet. During this period in your life you may discover your real talents and potentials, and develop these to build sound material foundations in the world. For this reason it might be wise to pay attention to creative abilities which previously you might have ignored or dismissed as not financially "viable", because Neptune's subtle and deep connection with the larger body of humanity may draw people into your life who can help you to fulfil your dreams. But it also might be wise to keep your eyes open in all financial dealings where you are required to trust others. Trust in a higher source does not mean being gullible; it also means using your intelligence and discriminatory faculties to make sure that your ideas and goals are based firmly on solid ground.

LONG-TERM HOROSCOPE: The planetary configurations
for Prince William

You may sometimes feel that something higher than your individual will is at work, pushing you into or out of certain directions or situations. To some extent this may be true; the Higher Self may make itself known through a deep feeling of vocation or calling, or an increased commitment to offering something to humanity. But childlike dreams may convince you that everything will magically fall into place, distorting your usual clarity. Things may indeed magically fall into place; your increased openness to others may attract situations where wishes really do seem to come true. But you also need to differentiate between what is truly right for you on the deeper level, and the passivity of a child who hopes others will take care of him or her. If you have to make any material sacrifices, try to do so gracefully and with confidence, because you may need to let go of an old lifestyle in order to make way for the emergence of new talents. But don't make unnecessary sacrifices because you can't be bothered to read the small print on the contract first. Those aren't sacrifices; they are indications of gullibility. Neptune's movement through the idealistic sign of Aquarius and the mystical, poetic sign of Pisces may reveal a talent which helps you to feel involved with others and committed to human development. That is the most positive quality likely to emerge from this time. As long as you are prepared to take responsibility for your own decisions, you will be able to enjoy on material as well as spiritual levels the increased sense of connection with life which this transit is likely to bring.

You are unusually open to the world's suffering at the moment, and deeply connected to a larger cosmos in which you need to find some contribution to make. This could activate a strong interest in healing, and it is possible that such an interest could lead to future work in one of the helping professions. Equally, it may be your own healing which is on the agenda. If you find yourself dwelling on the past and remembering experiences when you have been hurt or disillusioned, you might benefit from exploring these feelings and learning more about your inner world and the patterns of your childhood and family background. This could release a great deal of energy and free you from certain blocks, inhibitions or insecurities which may have plagued you since early life. Whether you do this inner work alone or with the help of someone you can trust, it could prove extremely important for your future happiness and self-expression. This kind of inner journey is not always a comfortable process, but it could prove a profoundly healing one which lays some very awkward ghosts to rest. Try to be honest with yourself about your feelings - not only those which concern your deepest assumptions and beliefs about other human beings, but also those which reflect your evaluation of yourself. You may need to recognise your limits as well as your abilities and gifts, both of which you may have underestimated, overestimated, or misunderstood in the past.

For a time you will probably have to deal with a fundamental conflict between dreams of perfection and the reality of the people in your life. This could prove immensely rewarding in the long term, because you have a chance to glimpse just what kind of unconscious expectations you have had of others, and how you can adjust these attitudes to accommodate a greater appreciation and understanding of the real needs and natures of the people close to you. Some feelings of disappointment are probably inevitable, but try to remember that they reflect the gap between reality and vision. You cannot bridge this gap if you are unaware of it. In long-term relationships, try not to let feelings of disillusionment drive you into assuming that some perfect dream is obtainable elsewhere. The fault may lie not in your partner or child, parent or friend, but in your own impossible expectations. The pursuit of perfection is a time-consuming and ultimately disappointing exercise. But if you can deal realistically and compassionately with what is happening both within you and in your relationships, you will gain enormously. You will understand not only what you most truly want and value from others, but also, you will find a deep fund of empathy and understanding which can allow you to let go gracefully, healing not only your own past hurts but also those of the people you love.

You may be especially aware of the larger world of which you are a part, and inclined to look for ways in which you can be of service to others. Your ideals are being strongly activated, and this could make you long to find a direction in which you are contributing something to life rather than seeking your own gratification and material rewards. You may also be unusually sensitive to others' pain, and unusually open to beauty in all forms, whether through music, art, or human nature. This could unlock unused creative talents, and help you to increase your appreciation of all forms of art. There may be a tendency to retreat into a dream-world, because your aspirations are likely to be especially rarefied and you may find the actual world rather cold and dreary at the moment. Try to avoid escape routes which could cause practical problems later. Your dreams are extremely important and it is appropriate for you to pursue them at the moment, as long as you exercise common sense and keep your feet on the ground. That being said, try to be receptive to your inner world, because it is unusually close to consciousness and could yield many creative and spiritual riches. Not least, your sense of connection with others is likely to be intense, and you may feel truly part of a larger life. This could open your heart as well as your imagination, healing any loneliness you may be carrying, and allowing you to express greater tolerance to those around you. And you may also find a new direction in life which involves you more deeply in the welfare of others.

Feelings of empathy, receptivity and compassion are likely to colour all your relationships right now, and you may find that you respond to the failings and flaws in your fellow humans with greater generosity rather than criticism or resentment. You may also feel you can let go of many things from the past, especially hurtful experiences from your childhood, and so this time could prove deeply healing in subtle but important ways. Make sure your generosity and empathy do not lead you to overextend yourself in looking after others; you cannot be all things to all people no matter how much you care and wish to help. Highly coloured romantic feelings may infuse and enrich a close relationship or reflect the entry of a new one into your life, and you may experience moments of real magic with those with whom you are intimately involved. Although no major dramatic events may accompany the inner receptivity you are experiencing, nevertheless this could prove a magical and deeply serene time in which you feel profoundly connected to the rest of humanity and attuned to the dreams and aspirations of all your fellow creatures.

Uranus in Pisces

Uranus takes seven years to transit a zodiac sign, focusing the collective on a new sphere in which to inaugurate changes and express ideals of progress. As Uranus moves through Pisces, the new century is well underway, and the earlier collective sense of excitement about the new era inaugurated by the Millennium, the gifts bestowed by science and technology have given way to a subtler, deeper shift in collective thinking. Because Pisces is concerned with the realm of the spirit and those levels of reality which lie beyond the mundane world, we may find that religious and spiritual concerns become a priority on a global level. We may also experience major new artistic movements, for Pisces is the sign of the creative imagination. Changes in the structures of orthodox religions are likely as the collective psyche is awakened to a quest for more inclusive spiritual values. There is some anxiety reflected by this seven-year transit of Uranus, because its disruptive, innovative energy, moving through Pisces, affects us on emotional rather than intellectual levels. This means not only shifts in the ways in which we perceive God, but also a potential time of artistic flowering as the human imagination seeks new forms and vehicles through which to express itself.

Uranus in Aries

As Uranus moves through Aries, the awakening of new spiritual values and the enriching of the creative imagination give way to a more extraverted and disruptive energy. Because Aries is concerned with the crusading spirit in human beings which seeks to change the world according to a grand and fiery vision, there are likely to be many movements erupting within the collective - political, religious, scientific and artistic - which seek to utterly overturn and transform existing structures and ways of thinking in order to achieve a clear dream of progress. This is likely to be a time of revolutions in thinking, and perhaps also revolutions on a more mundane level as collectives seek to assert their individual values against the threat of a uniform globalisation. There is some turbulence reflected by this seven-year transit of Uranus, because its disruptive, innovative energy affects us on intuitive rather than practical levels. This means not only shifts in the ways in which we define freedom and individual rights, but also a potential time of new scientific discoveries as the human mind seeks new forms through which to inaugurate progress.

Changing values

The innovative energy of Uranus as it moves through Pisces and then into Aries reflects many important changes in both your material situation and in what you consider most worthwhile in life. Although this planet has a reputation for being unpredictable, and may therefore coincide with unexpected shifts in mundane areas of your life, it is not inherently malefic or negative in its energy, especially when travelling through Pisces and Aries, both signs which recognise and honour the inspirations of the heart and the imagination. Instead, its inspirational nature could open the way to a brighter and freer future, even if this means letting go of time-honoured structures from the past. Changes in your material circumstances - even if you have not initially chosen them yourself - could open the doors to a discovery of new talents and skills which you could develop into solid money-earning vehicles later on. While Uranus is in Pisces you may find artistic or imaginative resources within yourself which allow you to find new ways of making your way in the world, and as it moves through Aries you may discover the courage and determination to make your most cherished dreams into concrete reality.

Learning to trust your ideas and your intuition, rather than following conventional rules of how to establish security, may mark an important and positive shift in your life over the next few years. That doesn't mean you should be gambling wildly, or dealing irresponsibly with mundane matters; but it may mean that you are willing to try new ideas out even if they are not validated by tradition and the past. You could learn greater trust in your own inventiveness and resourcefulness; fluctuations in material life can be creative rather than threatening, because you are required learn to develop qualities of flexibility and inventiveness. A new attitude toward security is likely to be reflected by a new confidence in your own talents, and this could be enormously freeing - even if, at times, you feel a certain anxiety because of the speed at which things are moving. Take some time to look hard at how you are earning your living, and how you might create greater freedom and creative pleasure by relying less on rigid structures. The old adage, "You can't take it with you!", may be especially applicable to you now, because you could find greater pleasure in the moment and greater freedom to pursue potentials if you treat material security with a lighter and more flexible hand. Your real security lies within, in your ability to respond to life's challenges through inner resources and inspired ideas. You may realise with increasing clarity the importance and healing potential of this ancient truth.

Bright new ideas

This time is likely to prove mind-expanding and inspiring, for the erratic and visionary energy of Uranus moving through the imaginative and impulsive signs of Pisces and Aries will be expressed through the sphere of your life concerned with ideas and mental attitudes. This could mean a time of particularly fertile creative inspiration, and an increasing openness to new frames of reference which expand your world-view and introduce you to unconventional new ways of thinking. Subjects such as astrology, psychology, or various fields of scientific and technological research could grip you, turning your interests in new directions. It could also mark a time when restlessness and a desire to experience new environments and contacts propel you to travel and explore the world around you. Although the inspiration of Uranus needs to be contained firmly within realistic structures, it is likely that, once the planet has done its work, you will never view life in the same way again.

Issues around education may also arise - perhaps because you feel confined by conventional educational structures and wish to strike out on your own, or perhaps because you feel you did not complete your education earlier in life and now wish to deepen your knowledge of the world. Communication is another sphere in which you may experience Uranus' erratic energy - you may discover new ways of communicating, such as writing or teaching, or you may feel you can no longer communicate with certain people in your immediate environment and now need to find a broader-based social circle of people with whom you can share ideas and inspiration. The intense energy of Uranus working on the mental level may cause you a few sleepless nights, mainly from simple "overload" - it may be hard to quiet your mind when it is so full of new ideas. But providing you exercise common sense about giving yourself regular periods of relaxation and rest, this time could be one of the most rewarding and creatively enriching that you have ever experienced.

Gentle changes within you may open you up to new friendships and fresh creative inspiration, and your ability to deal with problematic emotional situations may be greatly enhanced by a more detached perspective. You are less likely to feel personally hurt or let down when others are being merely human, and this may make you unusually tolerant and understanding of those close to you. Take advantage of this quietly freeing time to explore new contacts and experiment with artistic approaches which move you out of old attitudes, habits and structures. Right now you can explore the new without destroying what is valuable from the past, because you have a good balance between security needs and a willingness to experiment and open yourself to new ideas. These changes aren't dramatic or earth-shattering, but they are important and potentially enormously expansive and creative for your sense of self-value and general feeling of well-being and happiness.

The waters may be a little choppy at the moment, but important changes are occurring not only in your outer life but in how you see yourself and the goals to which you aspire. A new direction may open up which beckons you away from a secure but stultifying situation of the past, and you may have to face big challenges and define your values in a strong way to get the freedom and breathing space you need. Try to make these changes as kindly as possible if other people's feelings are involved; but don't regret what you are leaving behind, for your vision of life is expanding and new ideas and possibilities are opening up. Unusual contacts and inspiring experiences will brighten your vision of the future and make you feel deeply connected to a larger cosmos. Your energy may be a little erratic, and it might be wise to make sure you have plenty of periods of rest and reflection. You might also be wise to hold your impatience in check and look before you leap too far. But this could be an enormously exciting and productive time, when you strike out on new paths and break free of the restrictions of the past.

Emotional restlessness and a strong desire for change may precipitate you into a move away from past emotional involvement, especially with particular family members or the place of your origin. This could be a very positive thing, and this time could reflect a new detachment and a clearer perspective on old emotional issues which in the past might have bogged you down. You are likely to experience a new-found freedom and excitement about the future which could open the door to many creative possibilities as well as important new friendships. It may be helpful for you to remember, however, that the wonderful feeling of freedom which you are now likely to experience needs to be balanced with what you value and need from the past, so that you are able to let go of what is outgrown without damaging important bonds that form part of your roots and background. Like a bird taking wing, you are now poised for flight into an exciting new future. Travel light, but make sure also that you do not burn all your bridges behind you - leave at least one bridge intact!

Keep your temper at the moment. Your self-will and need for independent action are likely to make it difficult for you to compromise or adjust to others' wishes. There is a great freeing of energy taking place within you which could be enormously productive and positive. But if you have been an overly accommodating person in the past you may find that you get very irritated with anyone or anything that gets in your way. Try to reflect before making any decisions. You undoubtedly need change and greater freedom of action, but you also need to make such changes with some sensitivity to the feelings of others as well as a practical eye on mundane details. Don't rush anything right now. The time has certainly come for discovering new potentials and taking a gamble on new directions or projects, especially those which involve teamwork or involvement in group projects. But impulsiveness could be costly if you make the wrong decision too quickly. Curb your impatience and you will be able to strike out in new directions with new resources of energy and confidence, and without stepping too heavily on anyone else's toes.

Chapter III

Inner Changes

Not everything happening within and around you is linked with the great cycles occurring in the heavens. You also have your own highly individual pattern of development, and certain challenges and changes are likely to occur because it is the right time for them to do so. This profound inner pattern of growth is unique to you, and although there is likely to be some overlap with the changes going on in the world, in this sphere you may find that your experiences are entirely your own and the creative possibilities inherent in them depend almost wholly on your understanding and willingness to work with who you are and what you are becoming.

The Years 2008 and 2009

The themes reflected by the planetary movements in your birth chart during the next six years are given below in chronological order. Some are themes with which you have already become familiar in the last year or two, and they may last for many more years; we will begin with these. Some themes are new, entering your life only now, and are of shorter duration -although they may seem very intense at the time.

Dreams and disillusionment

Fantasies of perfect love may be colliding with the reality of your relationship life right now, and you may be experiencing states of either extreme enchantment or extreme disillusionment - or a combination of the two. You may have recently become attracted to someone who seems to you the personification of all you have dreamed of. This could be a beautiful and exhilarating experience. But if a new relationship has recently entered your life, you may need to be extremely careful to keep your eyes open and your feet firmly on the ground. Your chosen one may be attached elsewhere, and you might not realise it; or, if you are aware of it, you may be willfully misunderstanding the nature of the existing attachment. A new love might also bring complications into your life of which you are at present unaware, or there might be emotional or financial difficulties which have not yet come to light. This is not necessarily because you are being deliberately deceived. It may be because you are deceiving yourself. You may be so in love with a dream of love that you have not bothered to exercise the same common sense and curiosity that you might toward other situations that come into your life.

Other spheres of your life may also bear the stamp of an unwise enchantment, for a deep longing for perfection has been activated in you which may make you seek - and believe you have found - the Paradise Garden which can heal all pain and loneliness. You might be wise to acknowledge the extent to which you try to adapt your personality to others' needs and expectations in the hope of being loved. The chief difficulty with your present state is that during this time you are forming solid and permanent values of an individual kind, and these are conflicting with emotional needs which are much younger and more primitive. The child in you is seeking solace and care, and there may be something inside which wants the world to prove to you that it is a benign place and that you are looked after. This young and vulnerable voice, although not in itself wrong or negative, may be sharply contrasted by an increasing need for self-sufficiency and a sense of self-worth generated through your own efforts. On a profound level you are growing up, and the child within you may be having a last fling at rebelling against life's limits. Consequently you may secretly hope that some magic happening or magical person will come and take away all life's difficulties, just at the moment when you need to meet life's challenges as an independent individual. If you remain unaware of this conflict inside you, you may fall victim to your own fantasies, and seek solace in unproductive places and with people who turn out to be something other than what they first seemed.

You could learn a great deal about hidden longings for perfect love right now, since it is this longing which is being activated within you. The longing itself is human and fine. But if it is unleashed without balance or discrimination, it could lead to some very bitter disappointments. You may feel victimised by life or by others right now, especially by loved ones who may seem to have betrayed you or let you down. You might experience a loss or separation which leaves you with feelings of deep sadness and yearning. If so, some of what you experience may not simply be healthy grief in the face of loss or pain. It may also be the rage of the small child who discovers that life, and other people, are not always going to provide you with the perfect happiness you desire. Enjoy the magical states you are likely to experience over the next few months. But try to keep some measure of realism and self-knowledge available. Above all, avoid any relationship or situation which draws you into dishonesty, deception or illegality. Even if, in the past, you might have got away with such activities, this time you will probably have to take the consequences of any choices you make.

A time to let go

Your personal life may undergo disruption or upheaval during this time. What is really changing is you yourself, for the image you project, and the manner in which you perceive and deal with others, may now be proving unviable or simply past its sell-by date. You may feel that a chapter of your life has come to an end, and you could experience a transformation in your attitudes toward religious, spiritual and moral issues. A deepening of your perceptions, and a desire to relinquish many old attitudes and behaviour patterns, could cause difficulties in any relationship in which you have become accustomed to playing a certain role or responding in habitual ways. Your values are also changing, and you may feel on a deep instinctive level that you have irrevocably outgrown the person you have been. This could cause a certain amount of anxiety, especially if external circumstances confirm this feeling through some kind of ending, separation, or conflict which requires you to let go of things or people to which you are deeply attached.

Any changes which occur right now may carry a strong feeling of "fate", although they are likely to be the reflections of an inner pattern of destined growth rather than the dictates of some disinterested external cosmic force. If you look deeply and honestly at what you truly are and need, you may discover that even painful changes are probably necessary in order to usher in the next stage of your life's journey. Try not to let difficult circumstances push you into a stance of martyrdom, or invoke rage which you direct toward others. You may have to face the consequences of choices made long ago, and perhaps even the consequences of choices your parents made before you were in a position to choose otherwise. Although this may seem unfair, at the moment you could experience a release from emotional patterns much older than you are. Some sacrifice may be necessary to free you from destructive psychological baggage from the family past. You may need to learn to accept gracefully what you cannot change, as well as affirming loyalty to what you know you truly want and value. The problem is that you probably won't know what you want for some time; and you may feel depressed and sometimes a little hopeless because you are blundering about in the dark. Try to take each day at a time, contain but don't repress your rage, and allow the seeds of the future to germinate in peace and quiet. By the time this period has passed, you will be able to discern the shape of the future, as well as recognising the necessity of what must be left behind.

A troubled mind

Worry is likely to be your constant companion at the moment. Although there may be certain challenges confronting you which require you to clearly define your ideas, attitudes and skills, these challenges could prove rewarding; and if you can apply care and self-discipline this could be an extremely productive and positive time in your life. But you are probably inclined to be rather negative about yourself and others at the moment, and may feel you are not up to the challenges you face. You may also be prone to misinterpreting others' constructive criticism or offers of help, thinking that they are denigrating you or putting you down. You may be particularly sensitive about your creative potentials, and the challenges you face will probably be connected with how confidently you can express original ideas, feelings and intuitions. A deep fear of failure may afflict you right now. Try to recognise when you are simply being negative and self-destructive, and when you are being asked to recognise where your former attitudes and ways of thinking and expressing yourself may require adjustment or a more realistic approach. There is a big difference between knowing that you must work a little harder and feeling convinced you are facing insurmountable obstacles.

You may also feel isolated and misunderstood at the moment, and may believe that external responsibilities are not only weighing you down but also literally curtailing your freedom. Tiredness and gloom may interfere with your ability to enjoy activities. You will probably have to defend your ideas and beliefs to others, and this could make you feel particularly alone and also resentful that others do not seem to understand what you are trying to say. Some relationships may seem unbearable because of these differences of opinion, and you may find that certain contacts are not worth preserving. But you may also need to guard against becoming overly touchy and sensitive. You could be inclined to feel sorry for yourself at the moment because you are being challenged to define what you think and believe in terms that others can understand. This could be extremely positive, because you have rarely been called upon to be so honest and direct with your ideas and opinions and you can learn a great deal that could enhance your ability to communicate with others. The trouble is that you may feel you must adhere to their rules, which could make you resentful and rigid in your own thinking - or deeply self-doubting, which is equally unproductive. You have probably always had a tendency to feel you must adjust your thinking and speech to what others expect, and in early life this may have created many insecurities about your intelligence and capacity to succeed in life. If you are being haunted right now by the ghosts of early difficulties around schooling or communication with family members, try to recognise that your present situation may be entirely different, and new responses may be required. Learn to recognise when you are being too negative and critical, get on quietly but firmly with the challenges facing you, and you will be pleased and proud of what you have been able to achieve during this difficult but ultimately highly creative time.

Limits that heal

Your world may seem somewhat narrowed right now, and your mobility and power to express yourself may be curtailed by circumstances which sometimes seem frustrating. But on the deeper level the sense of limitation you are likely to experience is actually very constructive, because it can allow you to focus on what you really are. This could help you to prune out any false mannerisms or defences which are the product of hurts or insecurities you might have experienced early in life. You could achieve deep and potentially healing insight into the ways in which you may be fearful of rejection or worried that your talents and creative abilities will be underrated or overlooked. Although such insights may not be pleasant, they could give you the power to begin to break old habit patterns and change destructive attitudes which might have interfered with your sense of well-being and self-worth. Whether you achieve such inner healing alone or with the help of someone else, the recognition of where you have been wounded could also be the beginning of real inner freedom.

You may not feel your best right now, and personal relationships may seem limiting or dissatisfying. If you do experience such feelings, try not to let them propel you into making impulsive decisions. Even if someone else's behaviour is disappointing or causes you pain, try to sit tight, rather than indulging in retaliatory action or a flood of self-pity. At the moment you may be best served by quiet, privacy, and plenty of time for reflection. Any curtailment you experience can help you to define your strengths and weaknesses and recognise what you really want from other people. You may also discover areas where you yourself might be responsible, through defensive or critical behaviour, for creating relationship problems which previously you have blamed on others. Through frustration you may discover a deeper level of who you are and what you want, and paradoxically such self-knowledge could prove more enduring and healing than the inspirations and fantasies of happier, more carefree times. You have the opportunity to make peace with the limits of life over the next months, and discover new ways of expressing yourself which are based on real talents and aptitudes rather than an ideal fantasy of what you think relationships - and life - ought to be.

Inner equilibrium

This is likely to be a serene and happy time, when your personal life is full of contentment and you are at ease with yourself. You may feel confident and attractive, and relaxed with and tolerant of others; and this in turn is likely to draw their affection and warmth because you are able to create an atmosphere of harmony in which mutual respect and appreciation thrive. You may enter a new relationship at this time, or wish to deepen or strengthen an existing one. You may also experience a renewed faith in love and increased trust in your capacity for future happiness. You are likely to feel generally more calm, contented, and able to cope with life's difficulties with a minimum of temper and irritability, and a maximum of courtesy and kindness. Such inner equilibrium may be reflected in a comfortable material situation as well; or, if not, you may find that you can enjoy what you have without feeling frustrated or envious of those who appear to have more.

You may take particular delight in the magic of romance and the pleasure of artistic pursuits, and although you are likely to affirm your individual tastes and wishes without diffidence, you are also able to preserve harmony with others and respect their tastes and wishes too. The inner equilibrium you are likely to experience over the next months could have very positive effects in your working life as well as in your close relationships, because you are able to cooperate and listen to others' points of view - even if in the past you have found this difficult, or have had to deal with intractable people. You have the power to convey the harmony you are likely to feel within to the outer world, subtly changing atmospheres and affecting the behaviour of those around you. Creatively this could be a very productive time because you can find value in what you express, and may be unperturbed by destructive self-criticism or anxiety that your efforts will meet with rejection or disapproval. Although the energy at work within you at the moment is neither dramatic nor extreme, nevertheless in gentle, subtle but powerful ways it could result in a time of personal flowering. And if you have to cope with difficulties in other areas of your life, your inner balance is likely to have a far greater power to resolve problems in calm, civilised ways than any amount of battling might ever do.

Self and other

Love may be on your mind at the moment. Your ideals and values are maturing and becoming more solid, and it is possible that you will meet in the outer world someone who seems the personification of what you are in process of developing in the inner one. You may have a strong inclination to marry or to settle down in a permanent partnership, and you may experience a sense of completeness in the company of the beloved which you have not felt before. You have probably always needed people around you who could freely express the clarity and rational thinking which you yourself may sometimes find difficulty in expressing. Now it may seem that you have found what you were seeking. This could be an extremely happy time, and you may indeed meet someone who complements you and brings the best out of you. You may also experience a sense of stability in relationship which you have not felt before; and on the material level too, it might seem that the future promises to be bountiful.

Any feelings of happiness and contentment you might experience are not likely to prove illusory. But they are not solely due to having found the 'right' person. You are also becoming more conscious of yourself as a complex individual, and you may find that you are able to be increasingly tolerant toward others' differences. At the same time that you might love and appreciate particular qualities you have discovered in someone else, you may also need to be more appreciative of these same potentials within yourself.

Try to express these in your own life as well as you can, rather than entirely relying on a loved one to do it for you. There is no harm now in basking in the glow of another's sterling attributes. But later on, if you wish to keep the romance and happiness in your life, you may also need to allow your partner to be other things besides simply the ones you need to feel complete yourself. To do this, you will need to develop as a whole person, allowing what you love in others to provide the model for your own growth. You may also find that this period in your life ushers in a greater involvement with the world at large, and greater confidence in your worth and value. This may be especially true if you wish to express artistic talent to a wider public. And even if you aren't seeking, or don't find, any particular relationship which embodies your romantic ideals, nevertheless over the next few months you are likely to enjoy happy and rewarding relationships with friends, colleagues and family members because you yourself feel more lovable.

The importance of relationship

You may feel a powerful longing to experience closer emotional contact with others during this time, and relationships may now assume enormous importance in your life. Your usual intuitive approach to life may give way to a need for greater clarity in your communication with others, and you are likely to seek - and perhaps find - someone who seems to provide these qualities and can help you to develop them within yourself. You may have marriage on your mind; or, on a less personal level, you may feel you want to share who you are and what you can create with a wider audience. You are probably increasingly aware of the importance of others, and of the need to adjust your own attitudes and ideas in order to interact with them more deeply. On the inner level you are becoming more whole, through recognising that you are incomplete without others' intellectual and emotional input.

Your increasing awareness of the emotional reality of others could open up and enrich your personal life; but on a more profound level it could also connect you with the larger world of which you are a part. Social issues may begin to concern you more right now, and you may be conscious of your need to contribute something individual to the rest of life - not through practical efforts alone, but through a deepening empathy with other human beings. The English poet John Donne once wrote that no man or woman is an island, and you may be very aware of this great truth at the moment. You cannot develop as an individual without emotional interaction with others, for otherwise nothing you believe in or aspire to has any application to real life. You have reached the beginning of a new and promising emotional cycle, in which your inner development is deeply and inextricably bound up with the lives of others.

The Years 2010 and 2011

The planets do not stand still, but continue to reflect new themes entering your life. Some planetary movements began in the preceding year and are still relevant and merit further mention; others are fresh and will bring you many new experiences during this period.

Learning self-sufficiency

During this period you are likely to discover a new sense of strength, self-containment and serenity. But this process may challenge old habit patterns. You may feel as though you are carrying burdens in your personal life from which you cannot see any escape. You may also feel lonely and unappreciated, and others may seem to be insensitive, unresponsive or indifferent. However, before you descend into a trough of self-pity and resentment, you may need to recognise the nature and meaning of the process which is taking place within you. You are experiencing a period of emotional maturing which could leave you with much greater self-sufficiency, and at the moment you probably need to learn how to nourish and nurture yourself. The more you demand that others do something to make you feel better, the less likely you are to get what you want, for you are likely to be as closed to them as you accuse them of being to you. And if you try to hold on to relationships which are passing or proving unviable, you may be doing so not because you truly want and need them, but because you are afraid of being alone.

In the past, you may have depended too much on others' devotion and loyalty to provide you with a sense of safety and security. You may also have expected too much from others, secretly hoping that they would provide a kind of parenting which could keep you protected and sheltered from loneliness and change. Now you may have to accept the fact that others cannot provide unconditional love all the time, and you may need to be able to take them as they are without becoming bitter or cynical, or blaming yourself for being unlovable. You may also need to accept your own limits, and understand that you cannot be available to everyone all the time. Learn to value yourself and look after your own well-being, for at the moment it is likely that no one is going to do it for you to the extent you might wish. If you feel burdened with the responsibility to look after someone else right now, you may need to learn to say no; or, if you cannot, then you may need to learn to delegate responsibility or find a balance which honours your own needs as well as those of loved ones.

You are probably feeling very restricted and trapped. There may be objective reasons for this; but equally, you may be trapping yourself because you find it so difficult to express what you want and don't want. You may be too frightened of being separate and causing disharmony in your emotional life. Yet if you are not honest with yourself and others right now, unexpressed anger could place too much stress on your body, or you might inadvertently alienate the very people you are so fearful of losing because your resentment may show itself in covert if not overt ways. In some ways, you cannot win right now: Your choices are between self-affirmation and the risk of loneliness, or self-suppression and the risk of long-term resentment. Whatever you do, you will pay a price; inner strength of the lasting kind does not come cheap. But ultimately honesty about who you are will reap rewards in the future, while dishonesty now will result in the same problem reappearing even more powerfully in a few years' time. If you learn to define your own needs, you may upset one or two people. You may even have to say goodbye to one or two people, or put up with a period of coolness or friction. But you will also discover that you have loyal and loving support from those who truly understand you. And if you can stand on your own feet, you will be able to enjoy relationships much more in the future because you can grant greater freedom both to your loved ones and yourself.

Learning self-love

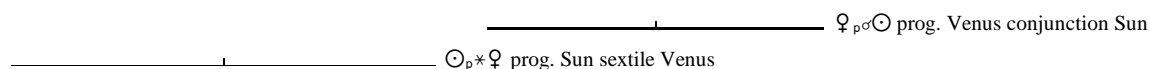

This is likely to be a happy and healing time, for you may experience a new sense of self-worth which makes you feel more attractive, lovable and deserving of fulfillment than you ever have before. On the most profound level you may be experiencing real self-love and self-appreciation, and this is the psychological prerequisite for genuinely loving others as well as for being able to receive love freely and enjoy its rewards. In your external life you may actually be in love, or may experience a sense of contentment through the birth of a child or unusually happy relationships with friends and family members. If you are in an established partnership, you may experience a deepening of your feelings. But it is also possible that you may realise you have been unhappy for a long time, and you may make the decision to look for a happier relationship elsewhere. Paradoxically, the realisation that you are lovable and worthwhile may in fact provoke a crisis in your personal life, if you have previously been living in a shadowland of self-denigration and self-sacrifice.

But even if an existing relationship now proves untenable, it will probably be because you yourself need and deserve better, and are beginning to recognise it. Even if a partner, lover or family member initiates a separation which you don't consciously want, you may find that if you are really honest with yourself, you might recognise your own need for a better kind of relationship in which your worth is genuinely appreciated. You are also likely to be much more aware of your specialness as an individual during this time, and you may need to express that specialness through work or creative efforts which allow you to feel useful and valuable to the world around you. You may feel the need to make a special new relationship of a romantic kind, and you are likely to be especially tolerant, kind and sympathetic towards all those whom you encounter. Even if major adjustments must be made in your personal life, this could be one of the most rewarding times in your life, and not simply because others may seem particularly responsive and appreciative. You may experience a deep level of contentment because you know and accept who and what you are, and are therefore not likely to sit about wishing you were someone or somewhere else. It is important that you try to take advantage of this potential for inner peace and self-appreciation by working to improve your close relationships and anchoring any creative ideas in concrete form. This can ensure that you will not lose what you are now likely to gain.

Taking stock

You have reached a watershed in your life, and it is time to take stock, review the past, and consider what you wish to build for the future. This is an extremely important time, and you may find that you can understand it better if you review your experiences, feelings and circumstances around fourteen years ago when the groundwork was being laid for the person who is emerging now. Although there may not seem to be an immediate and obvious connection between then and now, look for the ways in which the challenges and difficulties of that earlier time shaped the forming of your values and the ways in which you presently interact with others. You were probably going through or just emerging from puberty then, and the deep psychological changes accompanying the recognition of an independent sexuality may have left many unresolved issues in their wake -particularly issues concerned with feeling separate from loved ones and facing the challenges of being an adult rather than someone else's child. At present you may be thinking of being a parent yourself, or finding your relationship life or vocational choice frustrating or restrictive. Before you make any decisions, try to discern where the unfinished business of your post-puberty years might lie. During this time you may discover that certain unrecognised fears and defences from the past have created limits and constrictions in your life now - internally or externally - which you must remove or change if you are to move into the future with confidence.

Your strongest defences and feelings of greatest vulnerability are likely to lie in the area of your religious and spiritual values, and your faith in life and in yourself. Early disillusionment with orthodox religious institutions, or an overly conscientious religious and moral family background, may have left you feeling vaguely guilty and unworthy, and anxious that God, life, or some unforeseen chance event will bring misfortune or punishment your way. But at the same time that you may feel threatened where you feel weakest, during this time you may also discover your real inner strengths and resources. Any work you have done on building a firm sense of self-sufficiency will yield fruit now, and you are likely to receive the just rewards for your labours. Equally, if you have been trying to escape the fundamental life-challenge of learning to rely on yourself so that you can relate to others more honestly, you may also experience the just rewards for your evasion, in the form of others letting you down. This period of your life could be extremely satisfying or extremely difficult - or, more probably, a combination of the two. The deeper meaning of the time lies in the fact that, on the most profound level, you are reaching a new level of maturity and must face realistically just who you are, what you have built, and what you want from life.

A major cycle of your life is ending and a new one is beginning. Psychologically, you are like a child leaving home for the first time. You may experience the need to change your external circumstances - job, partner, home - to create in real terms the sense that you are leaving an old life behind. You are crystallising and solidifying as an individual, and if you do not meet this challenge willingly you may have it foisted on you unwillingly through the agency of others. If you have developed into a person who lives for others' expectations, and have not been true to your own deepest needs and values, certain structures and relationships in your life may have to come to an end. If you have been loyal to yourself, you may enjoy a wonderful sense that your life has purpose and that you are someone solid, real and worthwhile. Most importantly, you need to be extremely honest with yourself, especially in terms of the extent to which your past efforts have been geared toward pleasing others or earning a secure place for yourself through dependency on them - emotionally, materially or both. Face life squarely now, weed out what is false or wrong for you, consolidate what truly belongs to you, and you will move into the next cycle a better, stronger and wiser person.

Life can be unpredictable

A period of upheaval is likely to occur in your life right now, and you may experience sudden changes in work or in your personal circumstances which thrust you into an entirely new situation. The change may be of your own choosing, or it may be due to circumstances beyond your control. If it is the latter, you may need to recognise that you yourself deeply need change, and are not simply the victim of random chance. This is a time when you can break free of old, constricting structures in your life - not only in terms of your choice of work, but also in terms of the role you have been playing in society. Your image is changing because it has probably become stale or unsuited to the person you are becoming. And as it changes, your path in life will need to change with it. There may be some sacrifices involved, or a loss or separation of some kind; and you may experience quite a lot of anxiety because you are unable to see the shape of the future clearly. This is not an inherently negative or destructive time; it could prove extremely positive and creative. But you will probably need to fasten your safety belt and prepare for a turbulent flight.

You have probably always been an idealistic person, receptive to new ideas and interested in unconventional people who could share your original ways of thinking. At this time you may come into contact with many such people, and possibly with a group of some kind which shares your ideological or spiritual outlook. Your social world is likely to open up, possibly in somewhat unusual directions, and your sense of belonging to a wider human family is likely to deepen and stir you to a humanitarian commitment of some kind. Try not to panic if you feel the old familiar landmarks of your life are changing. You are leaving the past behind on many levels, and any outer changes you experience are likely to be the reflection of a deep process of liberation which is taking place within. It might be wiser to flow with this, rather than worrying about what others will think. And if you must let go of structures and situations which are now past their sell-by date, try to do it gracefully rather than kicking and screaming all the way. Changes are likely to come whether you cooperate or not, because you yourself deeply need them and will probably initiate them unconsciously if not by your own conscious choice.

A new cycle begins

You are beginning a new chapter in your life, not only emotionally but also in your development as an individual. In the last few months you may have experienced a sense of expectancy combined with feelings of restlessness and dissatisfaction. Although no specific event may mark this new beginning, your life during the next cycle - a cycle likely to take around fourteen years to reach fruition - is likely to be coloured by new goals and ways of relating to others, and, most importantly, a new emotional perspective. The area of your development in which new seeds are being sown is your expectations in relationship and your way of dealing with partners and colleagues. In the past you may have been secretly dependent on the support and security offered by others - even if you thought you were the one propping up their lives. Now you may discover the need to establish a different, more self-sufficient and freer way of interacting with others. The cycle now beginning may be marked by a need for change in your personal life. Certain existing relationships may come to an end; new contacts may enter your life; and change may be required in the tacit agreements, adjustments and assignment of roles all long-standing relationships involve.

The Years 2012 and 2013

You are continuing to change and grow, and the ongoing cycles of the planets continue to weave their unique tapestry, not as a statement of "fate", but always highlighting those dimensions of your life which are ripe for development and expression.

Overextending yourself

You are likely to be very fidgety and confused at the moment, especially with yourself. You are probably longing for change, particularly in your lifestyle and pattern of relationship, but you may not be very clear about just what kind of change you need. It could prove helpful to look at the ways in which you view society and pursue your professional goals, to see whether you are living within structures, or carrying attitudes, which are far too cramped for the person you are becoming. At the moment you may behave in an imperious, impatient, or erratic manner which surprises you as much as anyone else. Although you may want badly to express who you are and be acknowledged by the people around you, you may be seeking that recognition in an overly dramatic or exaggerated way. It is likely that you need to have a close, hard look at your lifestyle and personal image, to see whether there are areas in which you need to alter or even radically change your appearance, dress, and general manner toward others. You may have outgrown an old image, but are reluctant to let go of it because it is so comfortably familiar. Such reflection may be essential if you wish to avoid stepping on others' toes while you thrash around trying to discover how best to be yourself. Probably you are living within intellectual and material boundaries which have grown too small for you, and you may need to be a little more adventurous, open-minded and confident in your potentials. But first find out what these boundaries are, before you make impulsive decisions which might cause you regret later.

you have been denying your own need for change and excitement, and have become overly restrictive yourself. Either way, this is not a time to go rushing off because you are feeling restless or cheated of your share of fun. You could damage or even destroy a valid relationship which, while perhaps needing change, may be very fulfilling in the long term. Try to see whether your own attitudes and lifestyle might be making your life boring or constricted. It is not up to your partner to provide you with inspiration; it is up to you to discover it within yourself. And if a difficult decision is made for you, perhaps you need to recognise that you need breathing space too. If you can express the restless spirit of the time in constructive ways, you may experience a renewal of magic in those long-term bonds which are still important to you. And if you do need to move on, through your own or another person's choice, recognition of your own need for growth can help you to do this with a minimum of clumsiness and a maximum of faith in the future.

Pushing too hard

You may discover that you can be ruthless, tenacious and determined, and that you can work relentlessly toward a goal regardless of opposition. At the moment you may even revel in opposition, since it serves as a vindication of your strength and endurance. Powerful survival instincts are being activated within you, and this could open up vital aspects of your personality which previously you may not have known were there. But be warned. In your efforts to struggle against life and prove your strength and potency, be careful whom you tread on. It may feel like a life-and-death struggle for you, but it may not be for those close to you, who could feel trampled over as you grind your way toward what you desire. And if you display too much insensitivity to others' wishes and needs you may constellate opposition which really does compel you to struggle - and perhaps even to lose. Temper your will with compassion and common sense right now, so that you can make the most of the enormous reserves of strength and energy now available to you.

The experiences you encounter at the moment are likely to be deeply transformative, effecting permanent changes in your attitudes toward religious, moral and spiritual matters. There is probably something you badly want right now, and you are prepared to do anything to get it. Yet at the moment you may gradually become aware that something inside you is blocking your path, forcing you to slow down or even relinquish the thing you desire so much. Your inclination may be to batter down the resistance, or to give up entirely and retreat into an angry, resentful, smouldering sulk. The good news is that you could discover not only your strengths, but also goals and aspirations which really matter to you. This can offer you a vision of the future and something truly important to work for. The bad news is that you may also be learning a lesson about the fragility of the human ego and the human will. Before you can have what you want from life, the whole of you, including whatever hidden patterns and intelligence are at work in the unconscious, must know that it is right for you. And what you want so badly right now might not be right in the form you seek it, or might be at the wrong time; or, more likely, might be sought with the wrong methods.

There is an old Zen parable about two cats waiting at a mouse hole hoping to catch a mouse. The first cat is too relaxed and easy; it waits for heaven to drop the mouse into its lap, and while it dozes the mouse runs out and escapes. The second cat is too tense and violent in its expectations; it crouches locked into a paralysed tension, and the mouse runs out and escapes. You are a little like the second cat at the moment. Your own intensity may make it hard for you to loosen up and understand what is meant by moving at the right moment. Be loyal to your goals, providing they do not involve breaking or bending the will of another person; and work as hard as you can to achieve them. But learn to bow to time, and bend when you have to, so that you do not overload with passion to the point where you defeat your own ends through an angry ferocity which drives others away. Most importantly, try to recognise when life -or your own soul - is trying to tell you that what you want must be adapted realistically to the world you live in, and must respect the rights of those who inhabit the world with you.

Chafing at the bit

You are probably feeling very restless and expansive right now, and your eyes are likely to be fixed on distant horizons. You may feel you could accomplish anything, if you could just escape the constrictions of your present life; and your future plans are likely to be big and even grandiose, while the small details of how to actually get there may not seem worth dwelling on. This could be an extremely creative time, but it may also be a precarious one because you are probably not very well connected with the mundane requirements and consequences of your aspirations. In the past you have probably tended to be just as blithely oblivious to such details, but generally the combination of a good intuition, an excellent sense of timing, and a nose for opportunity has allowed you to leap over obstacles. But at the moment you may not find it so easy to leap. If you want to make your dreams concrete, you will need to balance optimism and enthusiasm for the future with plenty of patience and common sense. Otherwise, you may find that you have wasted a great deal of time, energy and resources on projects or endeavours, material, emotional or intellectual, which, because they were badly planned or simply too unrealistic, turn out to disappoint you in the end.

At the moment you are probably eager to achieve a more important position in your social and professional life. You are likely to experience a profound intuitive sense that life is on your side at the moment, and that your future path has purpose and meaning. You may also feel particularly 'lucky', but although the combination of increased intuition and optimism may prove highly beneficial, you may need to be careful of gambling with resources you cannot afford. This is not the time to wager your life savings against the right horse. Spend only what you can spare, and don't get caught by the fantasy that heaven will drop a pot of gold in your lap. Heaven - or someone who thinks well of you - may send you an opportunity, but you will have to work hard to turn that opportunity into real rewards. Yet the opportunity is likely to be there, and you are probably feeling positive enough to take it. A few years ago, you might not have believed it possible.

This may also be an excellent time to explore spiritual or religious issues. You will need faith in life and in yourself to take advantage of this time, and you might benefit from deeper insight into what you really do believe in. It is also a good time to travel and learn more about the larger world in which you live. The most difficult challenge confronting you is likely to be the problem of handling intense restlessness and grandiose dreams in sensible, constructive ways. Repressing your discontent may make you unconsciously drive others away, so that you wind up with the breathing space you secretly wanted but were too afraid to ask for. If someone close to you decides to leave, try to see whether you yourself might secretly welcome the change. You may also blame feelings of frustration on those close to you, and you may wish to seek more exciting relationships to help you open doors and make life seem more vibrant. But other people cannot give you meaning or purpose. You will have to find that within yourself. In an excess of enthusiasm and impatience you may inadvertently treat those you care about with callousness and insensitivity. Nothing is holding you back but your own fears; and although new contacts made at this time may bring many good things into your life, it is unlikely that they can provide any future stability or fulfillment. You are not looking for stability right now, and you will attract those who respond to the signals you are giving. For this reason, don't gamble with your emotional life either; spend only what you can afford to lose.

Chapter IV

Your Generation Group

You are an individual, unique and special, yet you are also part of a vast human family which shares the same hopes, aspirations, and needs. Between these two extremes - the individual and the collective - you also belong to a particular age group which differs from others. The three outer planets, Uranus, Neptune and Pluto, define different "generations" in terms of progressive vision, spiritual and imaginative longings, and survival instincts. The well-known "generation gap" is not caused merely by differences in age, but also by the placement of these important planets in the individual's birth chart. Your Uranus generation consists of people born within a seven-year period when Uranus moved through a particular sign. Your Neptune generation consists of people born within a fourteen-year period when Neptune moved through a particular sign. And your Pluto generation consists of people born within anything between an eighteen-year and a thirty-year period (Pluto's orbit is irregular) when this outermost planet moved through a particular sign.

The generation with Uranus in Sagittarius

Because Sagittarius is a sign concerned with the search for meaning and the pursuit of religious and philosophical truths, the innovative quality of Uranus marks you and your generation group with a somewhat unconventional and deeply inspired attitude toward all spiritual matters. Conventional religious paths may not suit you, and even if on the purely personal level you try to apply reason and pragmatism to such realms, there is a powerful intuitive vision which you share with others of your age group and which may erupt from time to time and reveal truths and interconnections which challenge accepted dogma. Your Uranus generation may well be in the vanguard of shaking traditional teachings right to their foundations, for spiritual hypocrisy is likely to be anathema to you and you can find value in many different approaches to the divine. One of the great gifts of your age group is the ability to recognise the fundamental affinity between science and religion, and you are not likely to suffer the age-old split between spirit and matter which has plagued human beings since the Enlightenment. Your world-view may seem unusual and even threatening to the established norm, but it is not only yours; it belongs to all those born within a few years of you, and in course of time it may prove to transform utterly the time-honoured ways in which people think of God.

LONG-TERM HOROSCOPE: Generation aspects
for Prince William

You are standing at one of those quietly important thresholds where an absence of dramatic events may mislead you into thinking that not a lot is happening. But a lot is - especially in relation to a great freeing of energy within you, and a change in your outlook toward the world. You are unusually open to new ideas, and may also feel a new and unusually strong connection with others of your own Uranus generation group who share your ideals and hold a similar vision of the world. In fact ideals may be especially important to you right now, and you may feel confident that you need to pursue a direction in life which honours those ideals rather than simply working to make a living. Your eyes are turned to the future rather than the past, and you could take advantage of the positive energy of the time to see how you might wish to be involved with the larger world in some way and make a contribution which reflects not only your individual ideals and beliefs, but also those of the age group of which you are a part.

Uranus trine Uranus
Mid May 2010
until beginning of March 2012

Certain cherished ideals may be challenged right now, and this could give you a chance to sift through what you think and believe in so that your fundamental values and aspirations are really grounded in your heart as well as your intellect. You share with your Uranus generation a certain view of how society and human beings "ought" to be, and while this world-view may be bright and positive, it is possible that you have not really taken into account the full complexity of human nature. Now you have the opportunity to combine ideals and convictions with a greater understanding of and compassion for your fellow creatures, and this could provide a very important balance which allows you to utilise your ideals more constructively in the world as you find it. The challenge now facing you is facing all those of your age group, and it is essentially a creative and positive challenge. Take the time to reflect on your beliefs, especially those where "rights" are concerned. Principles may need to be softened by compassion and realism, and you may also need to acknowledge your - and others' - dependency and interrelationship with the whole human family. You may have to let go of certain rigid expectations of others, and recognise that vulnerability and neediness can be as valuable and precious a dimension of the human soul as strength and self-sufficiency.

... with Neptune in Sagittarius

Neptune moved through Sagittarius between 1970 and 1984, and you, in common with others born during these years, partake of a grand vision of a cosmos full of meaning and intelligent design. Yours is essentially a philosophical and spiritual generation, always seeking to look beyond the confines of material reality to the grand plan which can reveal your particular destiny and the ultimate evolutionary purpose of life. Although on the purely personal level more pragmatic qualities may make you mistrust such an upwardly mobile mode of perception, nevertheless you share with your Neptune generation an ineradicable belief that nothing happens without a reason, and that everything can provide an opportunity for learning and growth. During the time that Neptune passed through Sagittarius, a new era dawned in terms of spiritual groups, cults, sects and societies, and this time was marked by an urgent need to explore alternative approaches to reality and a deep distaste for the hypocrisies of many conventional religious institutions. There is something of this quality of truth-seeking in all those of your Neptune generation, and you may well be part of the vanguard of those seeking new forms of worship and new interpretations of what we understand as God. Because Neptune represents a fundamental longing for redemption, and because all such dreams are doomed to compromise in this weary old world, you may experience your share of disillusionment with gurus, spiritual paths, and doctrines which purport to offer the only truth. But this is not likely to stop you searching, for one of the great gifts of your age group is an unquenchable spirit of exploration, mental and spiritual, which will always find some, if not all, of the truth if you seek it hard enough and long enough.

Subtly and gently, your perceptions are opening to the inner world. Although this shift is not likely to be reflected in any dramatic event or noticeable change in your personality, nevertheless you may be unusually able to tap the riches of the imagination and sense the reality of higher and deeper dimensions of life. The vision of perfection which you share with your Neptune generation is being activated, and this could make you feel unusually compassionate toward the suffering in the world. You may sometimes find it difficult to tolerate the harder aspects of human nature which you meet around you, and you may long for a world where there is no conflict, envy, greed or spite. Although you may not be able to do anything about this dissatisfaction which springs from a heightened sense of human potential, nevertheless during this time you could clarify your beliefs and find a new sense of belonging and purpose on inner levels.

There are big changes taking place in the way you see the world, and this may require an honest confrontation with all those secret fantasies and dreams which in the past might have made you unrealistic in your expectations of yourself and others. New ideas may make you question deeply held beliefs, and new contacts may leave you with important realisations about where you haven't been seeing people as they really are. This could benefit you enormously because, even if there is some disillusionment, there is also likely to be a clarification of what you really believe in and what matters most to your inner beliefs and convictions. You may also discover your affinity with others of your own age group, for all those of your Neptune generation are now being challenged to focus on their dreams and ideals and to make real what is possible while letting go of what is not possible on the plane of reality. Stay open to the new ideas which come your way, and try to utilise the insights you discover, in your creative work as well as in your inner development.

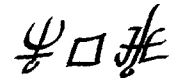

... and with Pluto in Libra

Pluto moved through Libra from 1971 to 1984, and you are one of those born with the planet in this idealistic, aesthetically sensitive, civilised sign. Although you are a unique individual with an individual birth chart, and although your responses may often be highly subjective and personal, nevertheless this placement of Pluto means that, on the basic survival level, you share certain responses with others of your generation group which make you long for a world in which balance, compromise, adjustment, and cooperation can keep the forces of chaos at bay and tame the more savage side of human nature. Whatever you might feel on the personal level, you have a deep instinctive awareness that social rules and civilised behaviour are the only way in which human beings can have decent, peaceful lives; and this idealism means that you may often feel unhappy and dissatisfied with certain human interactions which are ordinarily deemed normal and correct. ships in particular are likely to concern you, for you have deep ideals of how human beings ought to interact with each other, and these ideals are not easily compromised. You may have a vision of a different kind of marriage, a different kind of family structure, a different kind of social setup where cooperation rather than hierarchy is the dominant theme. Yours is a generation which may transform old social and sexual roles, demanding greater equality and fairness in both personal life and in the world. Whatever your personal views and needs, your deepest survival responses concern the need for order and civilised human exchange, even at the expense of personal gratification. It is possible that your generation will make a great contribution to facilitating this on a global level.

A subtle opening up of your emotional nature may make you feel unusually compassionate and understanding toward others, and you may feel deeply connected to the larger human family and its struggles. The basic survival instincts which you share with your Pluto generation group are being activated but at the same time refined and softened, so that you are likely to feel more on behalf of others and see more in terms of the larger pattern of human evolution. Rather than reacting to challenging situations with your own emotional or material survival in mind, you may be more concerned with the survival and evolution of the whole human family. This subtle process is not likely to be linked with dramatic external events, but it is one which you share with others of your age group. It is really a clarifying of your insights and ideals, and a recognition of those deep and hidden inner resources on which you have always, albeit unconsciously, depended. Psychological insight is likely to come easily right now, and this could deepen your knowledge of human nature and your ability to understand and have greater empathy for others' motives - as well as your own hidden motivations.

CONCLUSION

"No man is an island," wrote the English poet John Donne, and the planetary configurations over the next few years bear witness to this profound truth. We are living in an epoch when our relations with each other as part of a human family are changing our definitions of reality and providing the basis for the coming generations to perceive life in a more global and inclusive way than ever before. All births involve some struggle and suffering, and only the very naive could assume that such major changes in spiritual, social, technological and scientific spheres as we are experiencing now can flow smoothly and without pain or sacrifice. However, we are not "pawns on the chessboard of the gods". It is up to each individual to take the astrological configurations of the first decades of the 21st century and work with what they symbolise in as conscious and constructive a way as possible. No planetary aspect is intrinsically "bad", and even those which reflect a time of personal questioning and conflict can yield positive results that enhance life.

The juxtaposition of the changing of an Astrological Age with the changing of the human calendar into a new Millennium provided, and continues to provide each one of us, with enormous challenges. At worst, we may do what human beings have always done - seek our redemption through external political and spiritual authorities, blame our difficulties on others, and refuse to take responsibility for our own individual choices and dilemmas. At best, we may take advantage of the placements of the slow-moving planets to expand our vision, recognise the larger whole of which each of us is a part, and make the best individual contribution possible to that larger human unity. There is an old saying that charity begins at home - that is to say, within. Change, too, begins within, and living the dynamic spirit of these times in a creative way means, first of all, living it in one's own life in one's own way, according to one's own highest values. If each of us were able to do even a little of this, then we might truly see that giant's step in human progress of which the planetary placements now stand as a symbol and a goal.

Technical Information

In order to create your Long-Term Horoscope, the following astrological factors have been examined:

- the transits of Uranus, Neptune, and Pluto through signs and houses and their most important aspects to the natal chart,
- major progressed aspects of the Sun, Moon, Ascendant, MC, Mercury, Venus, and Mars to natal planets and angles.
- the Saturn transits which are important for inner development,
- the transits of outer planets over typical generation placements.

The report which results from these considerations is assembled from selected interpretation text sections. As the Long-Term Horoscope covers a period of six years, only the most important constellations are included in the printed report, only those selected by Liz Greene's model of interpretation. Otherwise - with a more detailed coverage as for example in the Yearly Horoscope Analysis - the report would be 200 pages long and result rather in confusion than clarification.

As in all works by Liz Greene, the Placidus house system is used. In chapter III, some of the same text as in the Yearly Horoscope Analysis appears, while all other text is unique for the Long-Term Horoscope.

The transit graphics

The timing of the transits and progressions within the focus period of this report is visually represented by 'transit bars'. They are printed in the graphical overview on page 4 and on the bottom of each page where the interpretation of a transit or progression is given.

A transit bar begins at the moment when a moving planet enters for the first time into the orb of a natal planet, and it ends when the moving planet finally leaves the orb and does not return into it (until the next full cycle). When the planet is in orb, the bar is represented by a full line. A planet can leave the orb and return later into the orb. During this time, the bar is represented by a dotted line. A planet can change its direction of movement; when it becomes retrograde, this time is marked with 'sr' for 'stationary retrograde'. When it becomes direct again, the time is marked with 'sd' for 'stationary direct'. The moment when a transit (or progression) becomes exact is marked with a little ' on top of the transit bar.
